[Detroit Free Prem.]

There is a legend affirming that one day, nearly a hundred years ago, the snow was seven feet deep on the streets of Detroit. On that day not a woman was seen down town, but next day, when the snow had settled a foot or so, they were abroad as usual. They were out yesterday, waddling through the slush and jumping the pools, and one of them fell "kersplash!" as she passed the fell "kersplash!" as she passed the Soldier's Monument. A man standing thirty feet away began laughing uproariously. Hagot red in the face, tears came to his eyes, and his hat fell off as he laughed and cried out:
"Went right down like a bag of sand,—slush a foot deep, starched up to kill,—never saw anybody look so cheap—oh! ho! ho! ho!"
"You are no centleman, sir!" re-

"You are no gentleman, sir!" re-marked a man who had witnessed the

"Can't help that—ha! ha! he!" laughed the other, bending almost double. "You haven't the first instincts of a gentleman, sir!" continued the other, growing very mad.

"I know it, but ho! ho! ho!" screamed the other. "I know just how she felt as she went down, carrying all that style, and I — ha! ha! ha!"

and I—ha! ha! ha!"

"I don't see anything so very funny in it," growled the other,

"No' you don't, but I—!" And he hung to the lamp post and langhed till his legs weakened. When he had recovered his breath he explained to the

"It was my wife, you see. She probably wanted a pair of shoe-strings or two cents' worth of silk twist, and it took her three hours to curl, and twist, and powder, and fix up to come down here to wade around. Then to fall flat with her wade around. Then to fall flat with her best duds on, and to be helped up by a rag-buyer, and to hear the boys yell out, why, it just takes all the—ho! ho! muscle right ha! ha!-hout of me!"

How NEILSON was INSULTED. -- Mr. Long, who played Sebastian in "Twelfth Night," dressed the part so well as to make a very close double for Viola, and this was the cause of a little incident at the wings the other night, of which Conductor Schultz was the unwitting hero. Schultz had come on the stage with his violin just before the dance, and seeing, as he supposed in the dim light, Long waiting for his cue, went up behind him and slapped him on the buck, remarking and slapped him on the back, remarking on the fit of his tights, and taking other familiarities. Suddenly the supposed Long turned. Schultz saw the indignant eyes of Adelaide Neilson, and heard a long hissing "Sir!" that seemed to freeze the marrow in his bones. He muttered a confused apology in broken English, and fied to the shades below, where his brother musicians had a difficulty in preventing him from strangling himself venting him from strangling himself with the string of a double bass. His mortification is beyond beer.— [S. F.
